

English Nobility Hotbed of Scandal; Lord Got Divorce

EARL OF STAIR NAMED A BARONET AS CO-RESPONDENT, AND SERVANTS GIVE FIERCE TESTIMONY AGAINST THE COUNTESS—CONVERSATION IN THE BARONET'S ROOM HEARD IN THE KITCHEN—ONE OF THE HANDSOMEST WOMEN IN ENGLAND.

London, July 22.—British high life is in a ferment over recently disclosed scandals. Several divorce suits have been brought and more are threatened, if broad hints exchanged over the tipples have any significance.

As usual, the inevitable house party figures in most of the scandals, and discreet valets and chambermaids are at a premium.

In the case of the countess of Stair, one of the handsomest women in England, against whom the earl has just received a decree of divorce, on account of her relations with Sir Neil James Menzies, of Castle Menzies, Perthshire, the servants are her undoing. They told enough to give the earl his divorce in the court of sessions at Edinburgh, and saddle the costs on the co-respondent besides. The countess and Sir Menzies were represented by counsel, but did not offer testimony nor cross-examine the witnesses.

It developed that the earl had parted from his wife in 1891, because of her alleged temper, extravagance and disinclination to live in London, but the divorce suit was based upon charges of which the nobleman received the first hint only in 1904. It concerned the countess' fondness for Sir Neil, whom she first met at a Scottish nobleman's house party in 1885. Upon this tip, given by a friend, the earl had matters looked into, and struck "pay dirt," when he got hold of servants who had attended Sir Neil and the countess, while she was following her own devices.

Did "Arriet ever notice anything suspicious between milady and the Perthshire baronet?"

"Lot, yes." And so on.

William Smith, a smug waiter, who said he had been valet to Sir Menzies in 1900, "made good" as the Americans would say, to a startling degree. He was able to testify that in May of that year the lady and the baron were together at the Hotel Regina for three or four days.

After that, Smith and other servants testified, the couple lived in the same house at Maidenhead. This house had a kitchen, as every good old British house ought to have, and Sir Neil's room was right over it. After the usual good nights were said and the baronet retired to his room and the countess to hers and the servants to the kitchen to drink beer and eat cold roast beef, a strange phenomenon was noticed.

The sound of conversation could be heard, as if from the room over the kitchen—the baronet's room. The servants decided that Sir Neil could not be talking in his sleep, for they also heard a lady's voice. As the house was not haunted, they decided that the countess was visiting the baronet, and told the court so at the trial. Whether Sir Neil ever repaid the courtesy by calling on the other side of the passage, was not known, as there was no kitchen under milady's chamber.

Zest is added to the case by the fact that the titled couple had been wedded for twenty-seven years and had three children.

The countess was Susan Harriet, a daughter of Sir James Grant Sutton Bart.

PULPIT YIELDS LITTLE OF THE COIN THAT BUYS BABY'S SHOES

THE PREACHER WHO MARRIES AND HAS A FAMILY OF CHILDREN ON $1200 A YEAR IS PRETTY NEARLY A BEGGAR—REV. GEO. E. HICKS, WHO QUIT THE PULPIT TO SELL SAFES, WRITES OF THE HARD BLEEDING OF THE MINISTER OF TODAY—MISERABLE PAY OF THE MEN WHO PREACH THE GOSPEL.

REV. GEO. E. HICKS.

(The Rev. Geo. E. Hicks, of Laporte, Ind., has left the pulpit to engage in the more lucrative business of selling safes. The low standard of ministerial salaries took him from the church in this article, written especially for The Evening Citizen, he tells of the financial troubles that beset ministers.—Editor.)

By Geo. E. Hicks, M. A.

The financial reward of a minister is not adequate to the demands of the twentieth century. His preparation must be of the best. He must have a college training that covers a period of from four to nine years.

Nine years are none too many if he desires to subserve the best interests of the cause he represents. This work is arduous and expensive. His equipment is costly if he surrounds himself with the best reference books and helps necessary in his work.

He desires to marry and does not believe in race suicide, although I am of the opinion that he falls in line with the majority sometimes when he anticipates the cost of rearing children in these prosperous and strenuous times.

But he marries and children come to his home and he obtains a pulpit in a rich city. He is a college man and he desires to advance. He has aspirations to fit himself for the best places in his church.

His library needs constant replenishing. There must come to his study the best literature. He needs more than half his time in his study, which fact the church does not appreciate today. His family must be clothed better than the average of his parishioners and he must dress well. His children must be educated.

When he accepts a call to a church his whole family are considered in the transaction. Is his wife a musician? Can she train a choir? Does she take an interest in the various departments of the women's work of the church? What are her social qualifications? How many of the children do church work? In fact the whole family lives to the church.

The minister himself is expected to be versatile. Is he a good mixer? Can he remember all the people he sees and call their names? How is his voice? Few people outside the "craft" know what the work of the minister is today.

I would rather travel a circuit of 50 miles the way our grandfathers did and receive their financial reward than to be pastor of a modern church in a city of 10,000 and receive $1200 salary. The work would be much easier and the earthly reward greater.

We hear it said sometimes that preachers as a class are poor characters in the world. No other class of men could do the work that the ministers do on the same salary.

Why do not the churches pay the profession better? There never was a time when preachers were trying to make money "on the side," as they are today. Scarcely a week passes that does not bring to me an opportunity to take up some easy (?) work that will supplement my salary handsomely.

Some enterprising firm wants to furnish the people with something useful and the preacher is the happy medium through which the philanthropic firm can reach the dear people whose welfare they are anxious to subserve.

Here is a specimen:

"I have a proposition that I am very confident will appeal to you, especially as you must be seeking a more profitable field for your work. Rev. G. A. former minister of C. I. induced something over a year ago to take up the work with us and I do wish that you could have a talk with him. I am at the present time in communication or in fact negotiation with the ministers who are very prominent in the work and I think that they will decide, in the very near future, to cast their lot with us."

Why should not a profession such as the ministry carry with it a salary adequate to properly maintain a family and yield a surplus for old age? It does not bring such a reward. Let the minister testify who has reared a family of any size and preached for thirty years and saved enough money from his salary to buy a home and give him an income for old age. The church is able to pay salaries commensurate with the ability and demands of the profession. The reason why it does not is because the church does not realize the need. The average church could double the salary of the average preacher easily and the time is here when that must be done or large numbers of ministers will seek employment in other lines. Many have already taken that action.

It is not complimentary to the minister and much less to the church when I say that on account of an inadequate salary thousands of preachers today would change if the opportunity were afforded. Not because they are lovers of money, but because they have self-respect and desire a sufficiency in old age.
